Some relief from the depression which present prevails in the Colony may be expected from the reduction in the Bank's rate of interest. The news of the proposed reduction has, however, not been received with absolutely universal satisfaction. While the borrowers hail the proterms as a genuine boon, those who are not the Bank, invest it in shares, or lend it on mortgage naturally, look with disfavour on a movement which is calculated to reduce their returns. The reduction of the Bank rate will naturally be followed by of stocks which at present yield seven to be set on one side of the account, but | that in some cases were but too apparent.

A diminution in the rate of profit does to the community or to the merchant. since it may be more than counterbalanced by an increase in the volume of business. This no doubt is the light in which the directors of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank look at the matter. Their business is to make money for the shareholders, and no

That was a good fight, but it could not count, partly because it did not last the lawful fifteen minutes (of setual fighting), and partly because seither man was disabled by his wounds. It was a drawn battle, and corps law requires that drawn battles shall be re-fought as soon as the adversaries are well of their burts." Some general reflections on the subject are given, from which we extract the following: The world in general looks upon the oplinge duels as very forcical affairs: true, but considering that the college duel is fought by boys, that the swords are real swords, and that the head and face are exposed, it seems to me that it is a farce which has quite a grave side to it. People laugh at it mainly because they think the studont is so covered up with armout that he cannot be hurt. But it is not so; his eyes and earn are protected, but the rest of his face and head are bare. He can not only he badly wounded, but his life is in danger, and he woold sometimes lose it but for the interference of the surgeon. It is not intended that his life shall be endangered. Fatal accidents are possible, however. For instance, the student's sword may break, and the end of it fly up behind his antagonist's ear and out an artery which could not be reached if the aword remained whole. This has happened sometimes, and death has resulted on the spoil Formerly the student's armpits were not protected-and at that time the swords were pointed, whereas they are blunt new so an artery in the armpit was sometimes out, and death followed Then, in the days of sharp pointed swords, at spectator was an occasional victim; the sud of a broken sword flew five or ten feet and buried itself in his neck or his heart, and death enemed instantly. The student duels is Germany occasion two or three deaths every year now, but this arises only from the carelessness of the wounded men; they eat or drink impredently, or commit excesses in the way of over-exertion; inflammation sets in, and gets such a headway that it cannot be arrested. Indeed there is blood and pain and danger enough about the college duel to entitle it to a considerable degree

"All the customs, all the laws, all the details pertaining to the student duck are quaint and with which the thing is conducted invests it with a sort of antique charm.

"This dignity and these knightly graces sug gest the tournament, not the prize-fight. The laws are as curious as they are strict. For instance, the duellist may step forward from the Banksline he is placed upon, if he chooses, but never, back of it. If he steps back of it, or even leans back, it is considered that he did it to avoid a blow or contrive an advantage, so he is dismissed from his corps in disgrace.
